

nevolence is giving to the weak not only the comforts of the strong, but inciting them to acquire those comforts for themselves. Developing latent abilities is better than giving money. Teaching thrift is better than giving gifts. Philanthropy and charity are not prerogatives of wealth alone. People can give time, effort and attention to benevolence which often bring better results than money giving. Successful business men who give their time and attention to proper administration of benevolence, often give what is better than their money.
